The Burke Library, the largest theological library in the western hemisphere and one of 22 libraries in the Columbia University system, has an exciting internship opportunity available!

Gain valuable hands-on experience processing, describing and rehousing archival collections!

Under the supervision of the project archivist, interns will work on important collections that are part of a three-year project processing the Missionary Research Library Collection and the William Adams Brown Ecumenical Library Archives.

The Missionary Research Library (MRL) Collection contain over 160 unique collections from missionaries and missionary organizations from six continents in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, with special strength in early 20th century China, Japan, and Korea. This collection contains a broad range of field reports, demographic surveys, and other analytical data. As a result, the MRL Archives document the cultural and social realities of indigenous populations in substantive detail, and will amply serve scholars of religion, historians, anthropologists, economists, and medical researchers, among others.

Founded in 1945 at Union Theological Seminary, the William Adams Brown (WAB) Ecumenical Library Archives contain over 30 collections, which serve as a source for the documentation and study of modern ecumenism. Today the WAB Archives include records of local (NYC), national, and international ecumenical organizations and communities, as well as records from ecumenical conferences (Protestant & Catholic dialogue) that have shaped global Christianity.
